This professional certificate introduces students to information systems, emphasising their value and growing significance in organisational operations. Students will explore why organisations increasingly rely on information systems and examine the characteristics of an efficient system. Topics include identifying various information systems within an organisation, understanding their integration, and recognising system requirements at different organisational levels. The subject also discusses the advantages and disadvantages of information systems. Additional areas of focus include management information systems, an introduction to auditing, the role of the financial manager, material and inventory control, labour cost control, overhead allocation and control, job costing, and contract costing.
